Navigating the New International Disorder Australia in World Affairs 2011-2015

Edited by Mark Beeson and Shahar Hameiri
Oxford University Press, 2016, 320pp

The twelfth volume in this definitive series on Australia's foreign policy charts Australian foreign policymakers' efforts to navigate an increasingly unpredictable international environment. It is a shifting environment in which established and long-held Australian conceptions of international politics appear to be challenged due to the rise of China and the intensification of a host of 'non-traditional' security concerns, such as Islamic State, climate change and, for some, irregular migration.

The thematic chapters cover and analyse major developments in important areas of foreign policy and are written by some of the foremost experts working in Australia today. It is a valuable resource for specialists, students and interested readers alike, seeking to understand the forces shaping Australian foreign policy in our time.
